Dear Readers,

The picture on the cover page of our annual report shows Sabina from Bangladesh lovingly hugging her mother. CARE got to know Sabina during the making of the documentary film "The Hands That Sew Your Shirt". At age seventeen, Sabina is one of the millions of people who work in dire conditions in the textile industry. She is participating in a CARE program that aims to improve her quality of life.

In the Sahel, increasing drought continues to exacerbate the food crisis. In the Western Sahel, 300,000 children die every year because they don't have enough to eat or clean water to drink. Seven million people in Ethiopia suffer from chronic food insecurity - even in "good" years. Unimaginable, isn't it?
CARE works in Ethiopia and almost all of the countries of the Sahel. Our aim is to help people prepare for drought and crop failure. In times of crisis, we support the population with CARE nutrition packages - especially for children.

The war in Syria is another "chronic" hotspot. We see immeasurable human suffering and millions of refugees throughout the Middle East. Syria's neighbor Jordan is one of the three countries in the world that suffer most from a lack of water. The Jordanians are committed to accepting refugees, but are rightly concerned about the unabating flow of people.

CARE emergency relief packages provide families in Jordan with cooking utensils and household supplies, among other things. But the ongoing war makes it impossible to answer the refugees' questions: "What happens next? When can we go home? How and where will we live in the future?"

Also actively involved in CARE Österreich: Dr. ${ }^{\text {in }}$ Heide Schmidt, Dr. Alfred Liebich, Univ. Prof. Otmar Höll, MMag. Dr. Paul-Oliver Kaukal (not pictured)

CARE's humanitarian work makes an important contribudion in this region, but can't solve conflicts of this magnitude. We must call on the international community and politically responsible parties to take action. The worst possible solution would be to "get used to" the reports about the situation in Syria and to look away.

On the following pages you'll have the chance to learn more about the work CARE is doing in the chronic hotspots of our world - thanks to your support, which is still so urgently needed. The future will bring new challenges all over the world, and it is up to all of us to decide how to handle them. We're pleased to have the opportunity to inform you about CARE's numerous activities through our annual report.

We're looking forward to working together in improving the lives of millions of people!

Yours sincerely,

The Sahel - A Safe Harbor at the Edge of the Sahara?

By Andrea Wagner-Hager, National Director CARE Österreich

Abstract

Imagine living in the stifling heat at the edge of the Sahara, in a mud house with a couple of emaciated animals. Water is an absolute scarcity, and wood is equally hard to come by. Hard to imagine, right?

This is daily life for about 25 million people who live in the Sahel, a region which stretches like a 150 to 800 kilometer wide belt across all of Africa south of the Sahara. Life in this region is a daily struggle to survive. Stock breeders and farmers often produce too little to get by and are dependent on food support.

The Sahara continues to expand to the South, a tendency which is accelerated by climate change. People in the Sahel are used to crop failure and drought, but they don't have effective and affordable strategies to deal with these challenges. Useful strategies exist, such as water management, crop rotation, pest-resistant seeds that require less water - but without knowledge and financial means, they remain inaccessible to the poorest of the poor.

Building Resilience to Climate Change

This is where CARE's work takes place: at the interface between technical possibilities and the traditional know-how that can no longer keep up with the rapidly increasing environmental problems. Our top priority is to help people in the Sahel become more resilient to environmental influences.

Access to knowledge is the deciding factor in developing sustainable strategies for the future. Livestock farmers, for example, strive to have a big herd, regardless of the fact that most of the animals are gaunt and in horrible condition. This has to change. Strategies and approaches for life in today's circumstances can no longer be found in the traditional knowledge of ancestors alone.

Acute emergency situations in the Sahel will continue to be unavoidable in the future. But we can diminish their threat in order to prevent further thousands of people from dying of starvation. Chronic catastrophes such as those in the Sahel can be prevented if the world community reacts quickly to provide foodstuffs in times of drought. In the meantime, CARE is working with millions of people in the Sahel countries to find sustainable strategies to improve the general nutrition situation, and thus the quality of life.

Jordan:  Providing Refuge from the War in Syia

By Beatrix Bücher, Emergency Relief Expert

Approximately half a million Syrians have already fled to Jordan to escape the violence and displacement in their country. Approximately 2,000 people join them every day. At this point, it is impossible to predict how long this situation will continue.

Jordan is barely bigger than Austria and has fewer inhabitants. Even so, the country has repeatedly taken in large waves of refugees over the past decades. Many of the two million Palestinian refugees in the country are now well integrated and even hold Jordanian passports.

A Life Spent Waiting in Line

The Iraqis who sought protection in Jordan at the beginning of the Iraq war in 2003 are in a precarious position. Many are afraid to go home. They are waiting for the opportunity to build a new life in another country, but very few countries are willing to take Iraqi refugees. And so they wait.

Throughout the 65 years that CARE has been working in Jordan, refugee assistance has always been part of our work. Today, our focus is on the Iraqi and Syrian refugees who live outside of refugee camps - that is $70-80 \%$ of Syrian refugees and practically all Iraqi refugees. They often live in very poorly equipped, cramped apartments in the deprived neighborhoods of Amman and other Jordanian cities.

Our goal is not only to provide material and financial assistance, but also to inform them about additional possibilities for support and to provide care for those who need it most. We cooperate with local organizations and also ensure that the needs of poorer Jordanian families are not forgotten. Living costs have dramatically increased in the past years, making it increasingly difficult for many to survive. In order to implement these projects CARE receives support from The Austrian Development Cooperation and the European Commission.

Protection in Austria

Austria also has a long history of providing temporary protection or even a second home for refugees. If we think back one or two generations, many Austrian families have a refugee story. For example, my father came to Austria in 1944 from Romania when he was 5 years old - one of two million people who have sought refuge in Austria. During the Balkan wars, Austria took in approximately 13,000 Croats, 90,000 Bosnians and 5,000 refugees from Kosovo. We haven't had another large influx of refugees since then.

Sometimes I try to imagine what would happen if suddenly 2,000 Italian refugees were standing at our border to get our support. And then 2,000 more the next day, and the day after that - until at some point there were nearly 500,000 refugees who needed our protection. And then I imagine there were 450,000 refugees from Switzerland - and then two million from Germany. Then our situation would be comparable to the one in Jordan. If we think about it this way, it's clear that Jordan is facing a challenging situation and needs our help more than ever in order to continue to provide protection and support for refugees. <

Austria also has a long history of providing temporary protection or even a second home for refugees."

EKATA Means "Together CARE Supports Textile Workers in Bangladesh

By Katharina Auer, Program Officer Asia

There is a drawing of a woman hanging on the wall. She is described as strong, independent, and autonomous. How did she achieve this? By gaining control over her income, improving her living situation and - as a first step - learning to read and write.

Learning Despite Difficult Conditions

The girls here, gathered to learn after at least ten hours of hard labor, are looking to achieve the same. They are textile workers, some barely ten years old. We are in the slum "Mullah" in Dhaka, home to many of the 1,500 textile workers who participate in CARE's SEEMA project ("Solidarity and Education for Empowerment, Motivation and Awareness").

Through SEEMA, CARE is working to improve living and working conditions for textile workers. In their after-work meetings, they study topics such as personal development, labor law, communication and conflict management. The centers are called EKATA, which means "together" in Bengali.

EKATA helps to develop solidarity among the workers. After the tragic accident in Rana Plaza (collapse of a textile factory resulting in over 1,100 deaths), safety concern are a hot topic. Workers are cooperating to plan communication with factory owners about safety conditions.

Empowerment and Respect

Empowerment is not only about strengthening an individual, but also about changing power relations between the more and less powerful. This is why the SEEMA project also works with the government, factory owners, labor unions, renters, local elites, and "mastaans" ("strong men" in each neighborhood).

We also aim to change attitudes about the value of textile workers in society and to challenge gender roles to create a respectful social environment. The girls are enthusiastic about making a change - even after a long working day! But governments and companies also have to demand compliance with labor laws and human rights in the textile industry, and ensure their implementation. Citizens and consumers in Europe can play an important role in making this happen. <

Advocacy, yes!

 Or: Why Political Work is Important for Aid Organizations
By Angelika Gerstacker, Advocacy Coordinator

Imagine you're standing on a bank of a river. A small child comes floating by, and you jump in to save her. Then another child floats by, and another... you could stay at the edge of the river saving children forever. Or you could walk upstream, find out who is throwing the children in the river, and convince them to stop.

If we wish for a just world without poverty and inequality, we have to do more than just fight to alleviate the symptoms. We have to question unjust systems and change them.

As an aid organization dependent on public funding we have to be careful with critiques of governments in many of our project countries in order not to jeopardize our work with people in need. We generally avoid open conflict, opting instead for constructive policy dialogue on core issues.

CARE Österreich employs experts in gender equality, humanitarian aid, climate change, food security, and psychosocial support - and these are the topics for which we make policy recommendations. We also support local partners in developing advocacy skills and in their advocacy work in order to bring the voices of the most vulnerable people to local and national government bodies.

Political Involvement with  Clear Priorities

In 2012, CARE Österreich provided inputs to policy processes related to the future of the Millennium Development Goals after 2015, the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development "Rio+20", the U.N. Climate Change Conference in Doha (CARE is a member of the Austrian Climate Alliance Executive Committee), and the revision of the National Action Plan for U.N. Security Council Resolution 1325. CARE is also jointly responsible for the "Mir (nicht) wurscht" campaign of the umbrella organization "Globale Verantwortung" (Global Responsibility).

One constant battle is to increase the Austrian Government's Emergency Relief Fund. In 2012, we were pleased that Austria allocated additional means to address the hunger crisis in the Sahel. The funds were used to implement aid and development projects to secure the livelihood of the people of Sahel. <

ALP Program Supports Adaptation to Climate Change

By Stefan Mielke, Program and Policy Advisor Climate Change and Food Security

Climate change is more than an environmental problem; it is the most obvious case of global inequality. It endangers the livelihoods of billions of people, most of whom live in developing countries and have to fight the effects of climate change with limited resources. The poorest of the poor are hit the hardest.

CARE is especially familiar with the scope and challenges of climate change due to its drastic consequences for our work. Social injustice in developing countries is amplified by unequal access to resources and information. The disadvantaged social position of women and girls often hinders their efforts to take prevention measures.

Support for Smallholder Farmers

CARE's work focuses on strengthening rights for men and women, girls and boys, to enable them to prepare for disasters. A further emphasis is on promoting sustainable agriculture and food security.

CARE's project "Adaptation Learning Program for Africa" (ALP) supports smallholder farmers and stock farmers in Ghana, Kenya, Mozambique and Niger in their efforts to adapt to climate change.

The intensity, length, and timing of rainfall in these regions have changed so drastically in the past 10 years that previously used agricultural methods now reap significantly reduced harvests. In seeking new methods, particular attention is paid to local knowledge, experience, and resources. <

Your CARE Package Makes a Difference

CARE Sponsorships
Provide Long-Term, Sustainable Assistance

Children and women are usually the hardest hit by the cycle of poverty. Disasters, hunger, sickness and death accompany the lives of many in developing countries. Without education, they often don't have the opportunity to improve their situation. CARE sponsorships primarily provide support for women and children. Again in 2012, our sponsors enabled children to go to school and strengthened women by providing the vocational training that makes a brighter future possible. Sponsorships allow for efficient organization and long-term planning of our projects. Learn more at www.care.at/patenschaften.

Students Support

Care Projects

During the Christmas season of 2012, the students and teachers of Gymnasium Boerhaavegasse in Vienna demonstrated the difference social engagement and desire to help can make: They donated the proceeds of a raffle and a Christmas buffet to support CARE's work. The International School Rheintal in Buchs (CH) also supported us with a fundraising drive. Thank you!

There are so many ways to help. You can support CARE with a raffle, a lecture, a birthday party or other fundraising activities. Learn more about how YOU can make a difference for people in need at www.care.at/spende/ spendenaktionen.

CARE Packages for People in Need

Again in 2012, CARE was awarded the Austrian Seal of Quality for Donations. This guarantees that all monies are handled in a prudent manner, that they are impeccably managed and applied. All donations to CARE are used to cost-effectively and efficiently fund our projects, wherever they are most needed. All donations to CARE are tax-deductible. Learn more at www.care.at/spende/spendenguetesiegel.

Forget-Me-Not  Legacy Giving

In 2012, CARE joined 40 other Austrian organizations to launch the "Forget-Me-Not" campaign. The campaign aims to raise awareness in Austria about legacy giving for a good cause. The initiative also provides information about how to name or bequest non-profit organizations (in addition to family and relatives) in a will or testament.
